CONVENTION AT EASTON

1000 Ex-Service Men Welcomed by Mayor Horn;
Look for Big Sessions

EASTON, Aug. 20.—(INS).—Gov. Gifford Pinchot and the State Government are criticized in the reports of committee on disabled soldiers and rehabilitation to be presented here during the day to the 13th annual session of the Department of Pennsylvania of the American Legion.

One thousand Legionnaires were present for the formal opening of the three-day convocation this morning when State Commander Charles I. Engard, pounded the gavel, opening the first session.

"We feel the United States government is doing much for Pennsylvania ex-service men," reads the report of the Legion committee. "We wish we could say the same for our own State Government. Sad to relate, however, every plan offered by the American Legion for the relief by the state on condition of World War veterans has fallen by the wayside, and rests in pigeon-holes.

"The most glaring example of this was the failure of the Governor to give any concrete evidence of support of the forestry rehabilitation school program," adds the report. "Although the entire plan was submitted to him and approved by him as practical within three weeks of the announcement of his candidacy."

Dr. Henry Pleasants, of West Chester, committee chairman, wrote further: "It is possible the proper political pressure was not brought to bear on the powers at Harrisburg that the ex-service men of the state might get proper hospitalization facilities."

The convention promises to be the most interesting and well attended of any of the Pennsylvania Department. Delegates numbering approximately 1050 representing the state membership of 173,049, the largest in the history of the state, had registered prior to the opening session this morning in the Seville Theatre, the convention hall of the conclave.

Addresses of welcome were made by Mayor S. S. Horn, of Easton; while Congressman William R. Coyle, of Bethlehem, and George I. Proehl, of Dube's, western vice-commander, responded. In addition to the various committee reports which will occupy most of the day addresses will be made by General Frank T. Hines, Federal Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and James S. Barton, national adjutant.

ATTEMPTED HOLD-UP
AT WRIGHT GARAGE

Two Masked Men Tried To Get Money From Employee

SHOWED NO FIGHT

Two easily frightened bandits went into the Wright Garage, Otter and Bath streets, this morning and attempted to stage a hold-up of the lone employee in charge of the place at the time. The employee called their bluff and told them in language which they could not fail to understand to get out. This they did without getting any loot.

It was about four o'clock this morning when John Macello, Otter street, who was the only employee on night duty at the garage, was startled to see two young men confronting him. Both men wore black masks and they were without guns. They asked Macello to hand over the money. This Macello refused to do and told the pair to get out. The garage dog then put in an appearance and made a protest at the men's presence. The pair then left the place.

One of the bandits is described as being about 22 years of age, tall and heavily built. The other as being somewhat younger, slender and shorter than his confederate.

GREAT FLOWER DISPLAY
AT TREVOSE EXHIBIT

Florists Are Urged to Remember Berry Bearing
Shrubs

FOR BEAUTY AND USE

TREVOSE, Aug. 20.—Stressing the beauty of berry bearing plants such as bitter sweet and snow berry for their ornamental beauty and colorful decorations which they lend to the country side through the winter months, Edwin Matthews, of Glenside, speaker at the annual August flower show of the Treves Horticultural Society held in the Community House here, urged the members not to forget that these varieties of winter shrubs were the only food sources for birds that during the Summer have done more than their share in killing destructive insects.

Many varieties of Summer flowers were exhibited, but gladioli predominated. The judges for the show were: Mrs. Quarry, Langhorne; George A. Masson, Trenton; and Mr. Hill. Names of the ten prize winners could not be learned on account of the absence of the names on the cards attached to the vases.

Plans for the society's second show which will be held on Friday and Saturday, September 11 and 12, have been completed, and all members are urged to have their plants ready for judging before one o'clock Friday, September 11. The show will open to the public at 2.30 and on Friday afternoon and close on Saturday evening.

An oil painting of a garden subject will be the prize offered by Mrs. Carl Snyder, an artist of Langhorne, to the winner receiving the greatest number of points. The exhibition will be divided into eighty-five classes, and a first prize will be worth two points, a second prize scoring one point and a third prize will give a quarter of a point.

Eleven new members were added to the society last evening, increasing the membership slightly more than seven hundred members, making it the largest rural horticultural society in America, and second in size to the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, which is the largest in the State.

No program has been announced for the next meeting which will be held on Tuesday, September 15.

THE GANE EXTERMINATOR

Lack of respect for game laws has long been characteristic of certain elements of our population, and sick enforcement of the statutes by those who are paid to protect game birds has lent encouragement to violators.

A lamentable feature of the situation is that those who kill game out of season have nothing of the sportsman in them. They are pothunters, at heart and a bevy of quail at roost or running in a furrow are slaughtered without a pang. They defeat the purpose of those who feed and protect game birds and other animals during the winter months that they may propagate for the benefit of all sportsmen. They can not be called "poor sportsmen," for they have nothing of the sportsman in their miserable make-up.

Depredations of the modern poacher are not confined to game birds. Even rural residents have been a spectator to the delight some huntsmen take in wantonly destroying songbirds so greatly cherished and so rapidly becoming extinct. Surely it is not their love for meat which prompts them to stifle the sweet woodland melodies. Those knowing the type would sooner believe that they are actuated more by the desire to take life and to pander to their pride of marksmanship.

It is fully established that the United States would have been devoid of virtually all wild life years ago had the majority of hunters not been thoughtful sportsmen. In the observance of the game laws and the conservation of wild life the sportsman sacrifices nothing because they are for his own interest, but he should not be robbed of these benefits by the unscrupulous and lawless hunter.

THE NEWSPAPER AD. ROUTE

That competition is the spice of business is too often forgotten in time of prosperity though good business forbids such forgetfulness. Fortunately for merchants and consumers, few commercial establishments are blind to competition even in times of greatest prosperity. The American business man is never content with past records and is ever looking forward to a larger store and greater volume of business. So regardless of how good business is, he constantly has his eye on his competitors. Competition improves the store, its stock and service, with consequent profit for the customer.

Competition for business is keen and is likely to remain so. The merchant who is not out for more business this year will have less next year. The swift current of competition sweeps downstream those who rest on their oars.

Persistent and extensive newspaper advertising is the most formidable weapon against competition. Best stocks and lowest prices are not enough. Prospective buyers must be told about them, and the newspaper is a proved medium for the transmission of the information.

Now is the time to buy advertising economically, to match in advertising the keener competition and business goal. Newspaper advertising is low-cost, productive, localized advertising.

"THE MYSTERY OF GERALDINE"

by ANTHONY ABBOT

COPYRIGHT BY COVILL, FRIEDE, INC. DISTRIBUTED BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

Geraldine Foster, pretty young clerk in the office of Dr. Humphrey Maskell disappeared on Saturday. Three days later, her roommate, Betty Cantfield, notifies Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt. Harry Armstrong, the missing girl's fiancé, had not heard from her since Friday. Dr. Maskell says he returned to his office Saturday to find Geraldine gone. At the Foster apartment, Colt learns from Betty that Geraldine had quarreled with the doctor. The Commissioner finds an old-fashioned key in the pocket of Geraldine's coat and part of a blackmail note, presumably in her handwriting, in the desk. Different ink than that in the apartment was used. It is learned that Betty quarreled with Geraldine, and that she was once engaged to Geraldine's brother, Bruce. Entering Dr. Maskell's home, Colt meets Maskell's chauffeur, muttering, "Get me to talk? Never. But Geraldine was good to me." The doctor says there was a strange woman waiting outside his door when he returned Saturday. After looking around his office she rushed out, crying it was too late. Colt finds a coat and purse which the doctor readily admits Geraldine wore the day she disappeared. Maskell claims he quarreled with her because she had broken her engagement. Colt calls on Mrs. Morgan, Maskell's neighbor, who corroborates the doctor's statement that her daughter, Doris, had distributed gifts with him. Two women were seen leaving the doctor's house carrying two bottles similar to that found in Maskell's office. Dr. Maskell leaves town. Geraldine's note breaking her engagement is found. The mysterious Ephraim Foster, of Willoughby, Kansas, who had written Geraldine, is a woman. A clue in the second half of the blackmail note send the police to a deserted house on Peddler's Road.

CHAPTER XI

I WAS already in my overcoat and on my way.

But here I must confess to an act of mine which may have seemed like carelessness. There was no intention of disloyalty, my part whatever, but it did seem to me then that an hour's time would make an important difference. The fact was that the morning I had telephoned Betty Cantfield at the Esplanade Apartments and invited her to lunch with me to discuss the disappearance of my friend. I did not think it necessary to break the engagement in order to carry out instructions—an hour or so either way would make no difference.

Duty Forgotten

Accordingly I met Betty at a Portuguese restaurant on Broad Street and I found her a very charming luncheon companion. Of course we talked about the fragments of the note she had found, but at first I tried to avoid a discussion of the case. Instead, I got her to tell me about herself, and listened with growing interest as she related incidents of her childhood down in their Western Maryland home. Her family still lived in Wingersboro, a little mountain town, where they had been neighbors of the Fosters. Betty and Geraldine had come to New York about the same time. Geraldine was studying night courses in accountancy while Betty was learning interior decoration in which she was now highly successful, having a good position with a firm on Madison Avenue. At no time did Betty refer to her engagement to Bruce Foster, the brother of the missing girl, and I did not have the effrontery to ask her about it, such as I wished to know if it still existed. Presently she asked me to tell her about my work, which I did quite willingly, and we lingered over the table while I talked authoritatively of the police department and my devotion to Thatcher Colt.

"I think you are a good detective yourself," smiled Betty. "But I suppose that comes from your newspaper training."

"How did you know I was a reporter?" I asked.

She laughed. "I know more than that," she said. "You were in the war and served with your old friend, the Commissioner, and you were never afraid of anybody but him, and the only thing you want in the world is another war, and I hope you never get it, and you're proud of your drinking capacity, aren't you?"

I stared across at her in amazement.

"You must be a detective yourself," I stammered. "Who told you all that about me?"

But she only laughed and said she always liked to know something in advance about people with whom she had lunch. I saw then that she had talked with Thatcher Colt when I was not present.

A Deserted Village

Then Betty begged me to tell her more about what Thatcher Colt was doing to find her roommate. So interested was she in the matter that I then and there confided to her my assignment, whereupon she pleaded to let her accompany me uptown.

In this request, I saw no real harm. Betty's interest in the case was so keen, and her knowledge of Geraldine Foster so valuable that telling, in this disarray of bare trees, frozen sod and rutted by-path, set down in the midst of a great city—this mountain wilderness where there were no street signs, guide posts, nor the sight of any living human being of whom we might inquire.

"I think this must be the place," said Betty, pointing to a turn into a wider sort of road, but in no better condition, a few feet beyond. There were a few large old trees, whose bare boughs scraped and cried in the wind of that bleak afternoon, and skirting these we came suddenly upon a lonely house—the only dwelling on what we learned later was really Peddler's Road.

What we had come upon was a two-story wooden house, called a portable, or assembled house, manufactured in sections and often sold through the mail. This was a charming one, in good condition, newly painted white with green windows and door sills. Its green pitch roof and the white scrim curtains produced a pleasing and home-like impression.

"Perhaps," I said, "there is some one home, and we can make inquiries. But first, let's take a look around."

Leading the way, I passed to the rear of the house, where at first I found nothing unusual, except one broken kitchen window. I detected no signs of life, but instead, in the next minute, I came upon

"I met Betty at a Portuguese restaurant on Broad Street and I found her a very charming luncheon companion."

I was glad to have her. It was about half past two o'clock when I telephoned for a department car and we started our long drive from the lower part of the Island into Upper Manhattan near the frontier line of the Harlem River.

At Dyckman Street we left the car and after some search climbed a narrow path that started from Broadway and toiled up a steep slope into a region strangely at variance with the built-up streets that hemmed it all around. Like an oasis of forgotten country, this stretch of land hid itself in the midst of a region filled with apartment houses, stores and garages, with the ferry slip and the river only a few thousand feet away. Old trees were growing there, and a few quaint and abandoned frame houses, now falling to pieces.

I remember that as we trudged forward up the hill, a small sorrowful boy passed us and I called to him, "Where is Peddler's Road?"

"Up there by the haunted house where you can see the naked ghost."

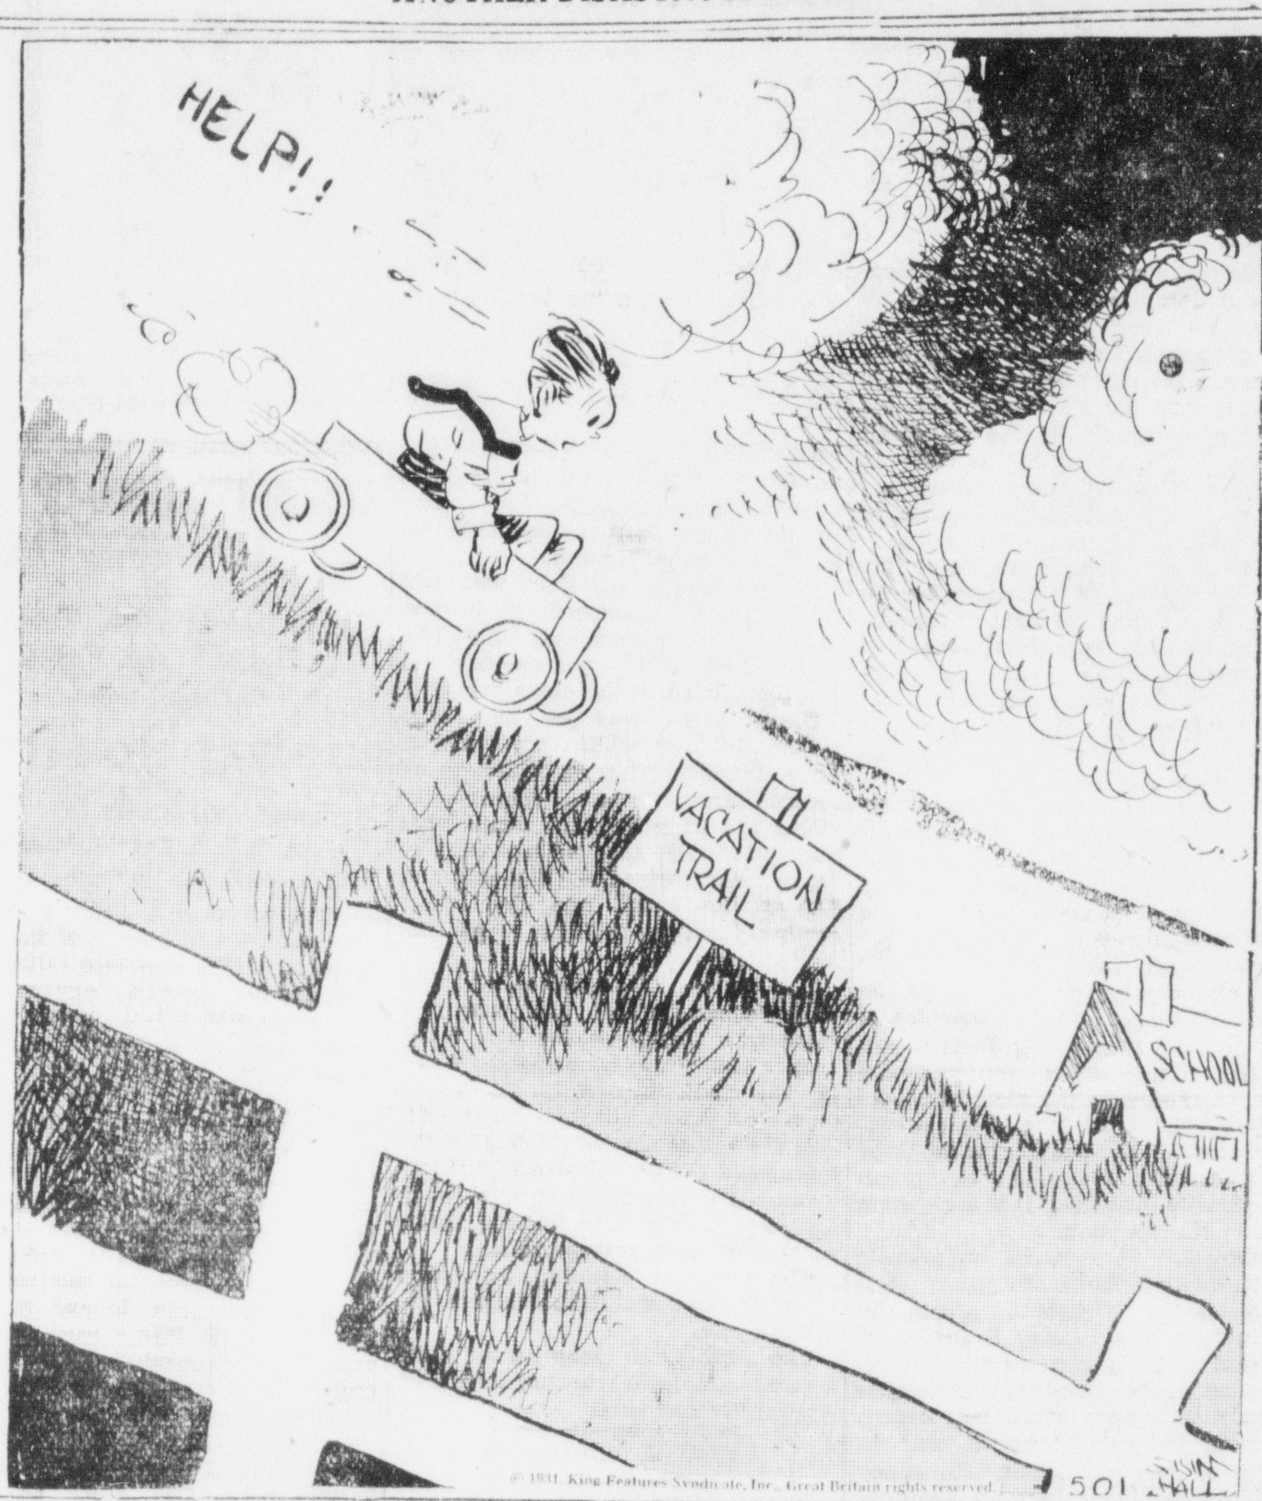

"What's that? Come here!" I cried, but the boy ran down the steep slope, and was almost instantly lost to sight. Betty and I looked at each other and then laughed, for the encounter then seemed odd and yet absurd, and our own situation somewhat ridiculous. Was this lane which now had led us to the heights of this promontory the Peddler's Road that we had come here to seek? There seemed no way of

"I am sorry, Betty," I said, "but all this is very peculiar. What are these red stains on the poor birds? Have they been drinking red paint and poisoned themselves or—"

I stopped, struck with a fantastic notion. Those stains on the breast—could they be blood stains? How had they come there? Was there some open stream near by where the pigeons flew to drink? Had they drunk from a brook that ran red with human blood?

CHINA

By John Goette
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
PEIPING, Aug. 20.—The latest census of Nanking, China's new capital, shows it to be the home of 157 Americans, many of whom returned after having fled before the anti-foreign mobs of 1927. The American community is the second largest, following closely upon the Japanese.

It is noteworthy that the diplomatic missions which come and go between Peiping and Nanking have remarked the changed attitude of the people of Nanking toward Americans and other foreigners. Until recent months the foreigner was almost certain to be bullied when he appeared on the streets and at least once the American Minister and his secretary were spat upon.

It is impossible to say whether the new and more friendly condition results from the issuance of orders from higher up or is merely because the people of Nanking are getting more used to the diplomatic visits which are made with increasing frequency.

Figures for the other nationals in Nanking include 168 Japanese, 92 British, 53 Germans, 12 Russians, 7 Koreans, 5 French, 4 Indians, and one or two each of Swedes, Yugoslavs, Austrians, Belgians, Canadians and Dutch.

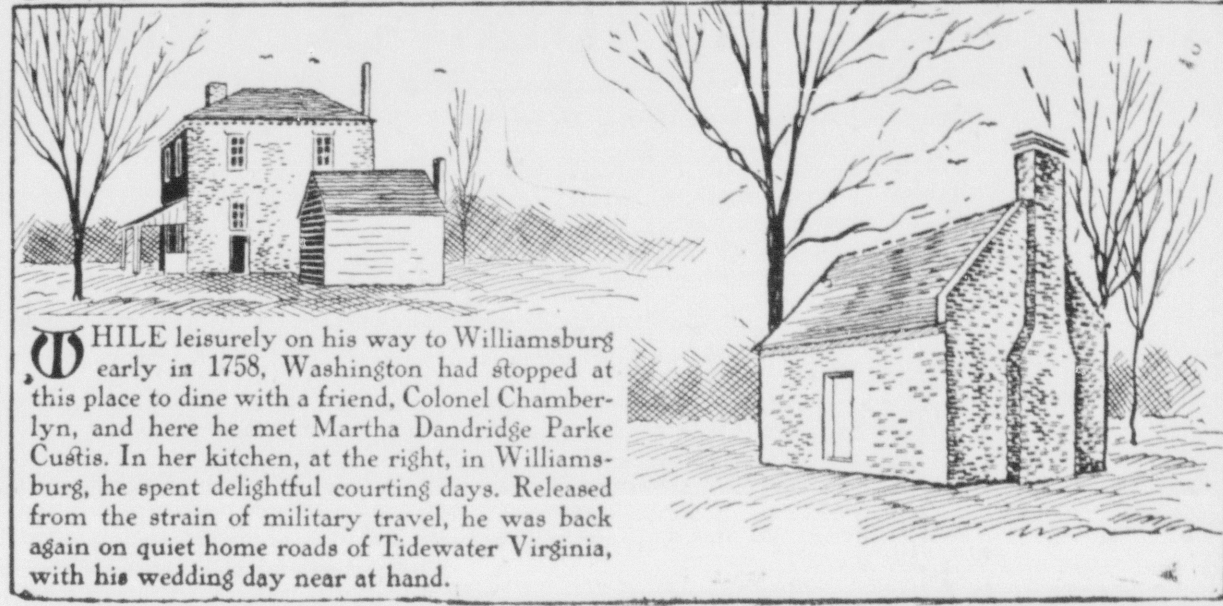

For sixty-three generations the Chang family kept in its possession the sacred finger nails of the Taoist saint Chang Tien Szu and the family prospered. Now misfortune has come and the present descendant, Chang En-fu has fled to Shanghai from his native estate, the Mountain of the Tiger and Dragon.

The Mountain of the Tiger and Dragon has been confiscated by the communists and Chang En-fu is a wanderer all because the sacred finger nails were lost. The superstition which remained potent for centuries was that the original Chang worked miracles among the people with his amulets written with red ink on yellow paper. When swallowed, the sick were alleged to be cured of any malady.

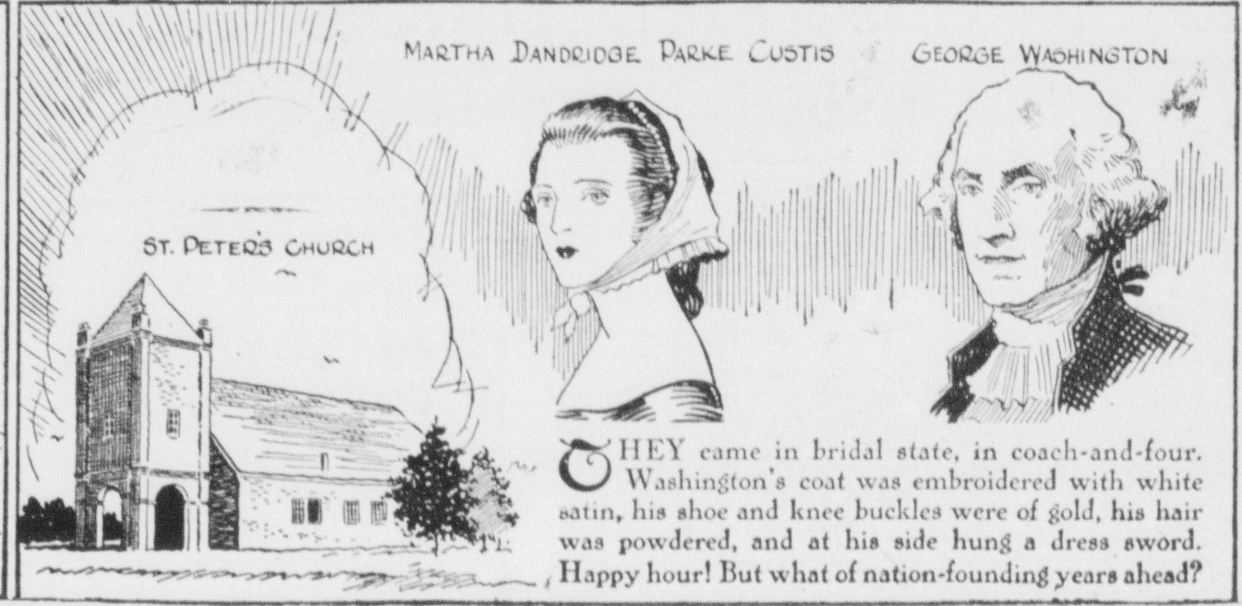

To carry on the good work, and incidentally maintain the family

WHILE leisurely on his way to Williamsburg early in 1758, Washington had stopped at this place to dine with a friend, Colonel Chamberlyn, and here he met Martha Dandridge Parke Custis. In her kitchen, at the right, in Williamsburg, he spent delightful courting days. Released from the strain of military travel, he was back again on quiet home roads of Tidewater Virginia, with his wedding day near at hand.

THEY came in bridal state, in coach-and-four. Washington's coat was embroidered with white satin, his shoe and knee buckles were of gold, his hair was powdered, and at his side hung a dress sword. Happy hour! But what of nation-founding years ahead?

exchequer through the centuries, the Chang family preserved the finger nails of the saints, using them for the writing of the mystic characters on the healing amulets. The nails are gone and Chang En-fu, sixty-third descendant of the saint is homeless and broken. He is at present the guest of a wealthy merchant in Shanghai for whom he is conducting religious rites.

The powerful grip which 2500 year old Confucian ethics still retains on modern, Nationalist China, comes to the fore in a law adopted by the Legislative Yuan at Nanking.

In sixteen articles it extols and holds up for emulation the time honored virtues of loyalty, filial piety, fidelity and benevolence. Sponsors of the new law express the view that a return to these virtues are necessary since they have steadily been losing their hold on the people since the influx of American and European civilization and ways of living.

Consequently medals and tablets of honor will be conferred upon Chinese distinguished for moral eminence through the practice of the virtues of loyalty, filial piety, benevolence, love, faithfulness, fidelity and peace.

In a second category of honor are those who either promote or sponsor or make substantial financial contributions to such public institutions as schools, philanthropic societies, and other enterprises devoted to the promotion of public welfare.

Selection for honor rests with the local authorities who are instructed to investigate the deeds of those due for the medal or tablet. President Chiang Kai-shek is reported to have been personally interested in the passage of the new law.

Several records were broken among old Chinese customs, when the 72 year old Shan Tsai-sheng said "I will" to the pastor who united him in holy matrimony with the 58 year old Lu Ke, in the chapel of the American St. John's University, in Shanghai.

To begin with, the former Miss Lu broke a record in going through life single. That among Chinese is almost a disgrace. Secondly, there is a vast gap between marriage at 72 and at anywhere from ten years onward, as is also the common custom in China where parents select the bride for the son while he is still a child.

China's "Lindy" came down with a crash when the Nationalist Government signed the order for his dismissal as director of the Aviation Department of the Ministry of Military Affairs.

Commander Chang Hui-chang, a Cantonese, was trained in the United States and made the first flight from Canton to Peiping several years ago. The real cause of his dismissal is his defection to the new Canton revolt which he joined the moment it was launched.

The Chinese government is preparing to provide 400,000 Chinese dollars for a national exhibit in the Centenary Exposition of the city of Chicago in 1933. Although the national government will furnish the funds, the various Chambers of Commerce will attend to selection of exhibits.

The school terms has a total of 194 days.

From September 17, to date of the close of the Extension Course from Pennsylvania State College, the schools will be closed each Wednesday at 12 noon to permit the teachers to attend the classes.

For use in the commercial department the school board has purchased five adding machines and one large bookkeeping machine. By means of these machines the students of this department will be trained to meet modern practice in business.

An electric cash register has likewise been purchased by the board for use in the cafeteria. The young women of the commercial department will take turns in presiding at the cash register under direction of the commercial teachers, and in this manner with records that will be taken from the register to their class rooms secure much practical experience. This piece of mechanism is unique in view of the fact that besides the amount of the items purchased it records just what the items are—such as milk, sandwiches, soup, cakes, etc. In this manner those operating the cafeteria will be enabled to keep closer check when ordering supplies. At the Harriman building the science laboratory is being renovated. The interior of this building is being painted.

A NEW STORE ON OLD YORK ROAD

(TO BE OPENED SOON)

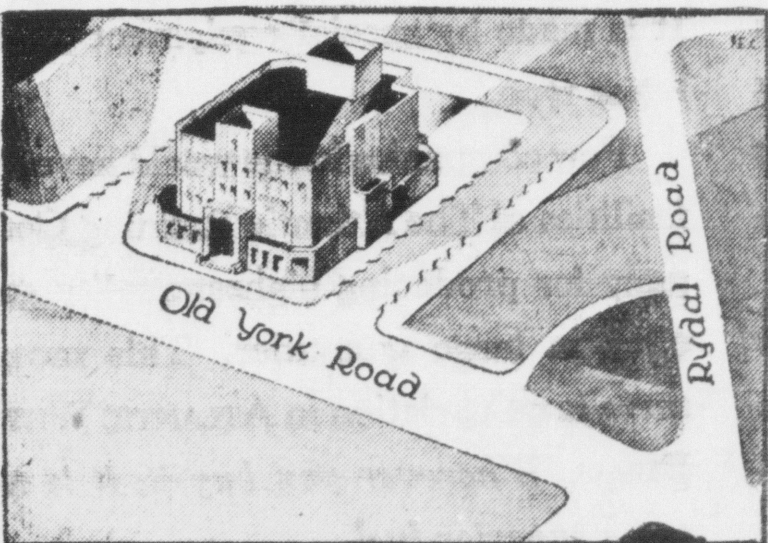

Bringing Strawbridge & Clothier Service Nearer to the Homes of Many Thousands of Customers

WHILE hundreds of artisans have been rushing toward completion the last sectional unit of our New $10,000,000 Store in the heart of Philadelphia, another beautiful Strawbridge & Clothier Store has been erected on The Old York Road at Rydal Road—to be ready for business in a very short time.

Thus the service and advantages of a modern Metropolitan Store are extended for the convenience of a vast community to the northward, as they were extended to the westward by the building of our Main Line Store at Ardmore.

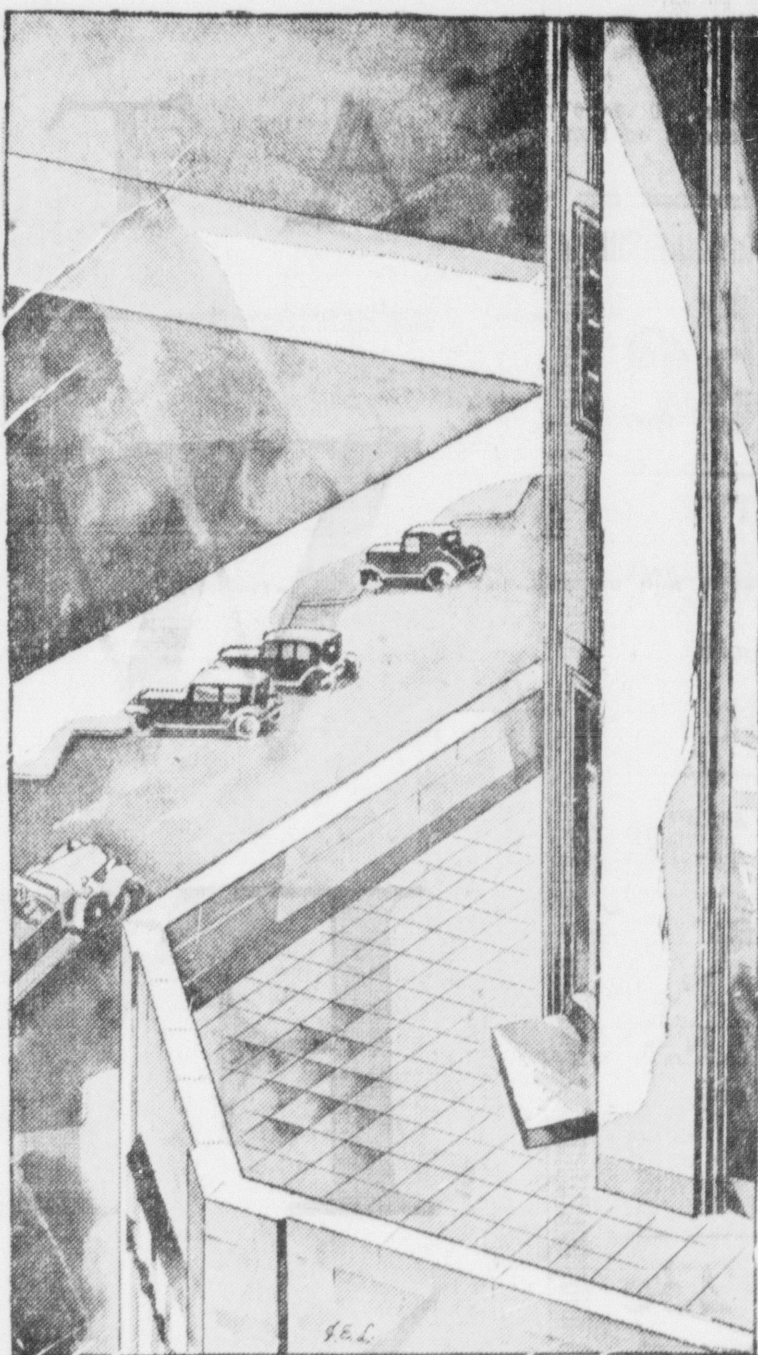

We believe it is no exaggeration to say that this Old York Road Store is the finest suburban store in this country—beautiful architecturally, practical in arrangement, especially designed for its location and field of service.

The Strawbridge & Clothier Philadelphia Store has been a landmark of the city's shopping centre for 63 years. Nothing can ever supplant it. But the great success of our Main Line Store proves that there is a distinct field for the suburban store, strategically located, skillfully managed, with a practical, comprehensive duplication of such stocks as Women's, Misses' and Children's Apparel, Dress Accessories and Small Wares, with the assurance of the newest fashions, the attractive assortments and the moderate prices which only a large organization such as ours, with its world-wide market facilities, can make possible.

Intersection of The Old York Road and Rydal Road—site of our new Suburban Store

If you do not already have a charge account with us, we suggest that you open one before our opening day on The Old York Road—just write to the Credit Manager of Strawbridge & Clothier, or call at our Philadelphia Store.

View from the Tea Room overlooking the terrace to the individual parking spaces

THE choice of location seems to have been almost an inspiration. This new Suburban Store is on one of the greatest motor-thoroughfares in Pennsylvania—The Old York Road between Jenkintown and Noble. Within five miles reside several hundred thousand people—and at some greater distance in every direction, but directly reached by splendid highways, are many suburban towns, hitherto without such service within easy motoring distance. The Reading Railroad with its new electrical service is close by; trolley lines pass in front of the Store, while motorbus service reaches it from various points.

That ample parking facilities are of vital importance in planning suburban service has been proved at our Main Line Store. Even more extensive and practical are the provisions for parking at the Strawbridge & Clothier Old York Road Store. This is a boon to women drivers especially. Not only do we have outside parking area for hundreds of cars, but also a fine underground garage, where your car may be left, without charge, and from which you may step directly into the lower main floor of the Store.

As our City Store for generations has been a large factor in the development of the retail centre, so do we trust that our Old York Road Store may find a hearty welcome among the other merchants of this densely populated section because it will bring additional business to Jenkintown and vicinity, and add to the prestige and prosperity of this section as a popular trading centre.

Next week we shall tell you more about this New Store—the merchandise departments, the exhibition salon, the tea room and other distinctive features.

LANGHORNE TEAM WINS OVER TRENTON GOLFERS

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 20.—For the first time in their meetings, the women's golf team of the Bucks County Country Club, triumphed over the Trenton team when the Langhorne feminine stars hung up a 17-7 victory at the Oaklands yesterday.

It could hardly be classed as an upset, for the teams appeared to be at least evenly matched. Poor golf on the part of the Trenton team, however, gave a strong Langhorne contingent its opening with the result that points were scored with unusual abandon.

The big surprise of the day came when Mrs. Matthew J. Scammell, Trenton champion, was held on even terms by Miss Helen O'Connor. The net result of this meeting was no points for either team, as the match was halved three ways. Mrs. R. J. Stokes won two points in her battle with Mrs. Freda Griffin, while the Langhorne player scored one. Another well played and closely contested match was that between Miss Doris Taylor and Mrs. Arthur F. Hagar. Each scored one point.

Friday the Trenton team will trek to Hopewell to meet the Valley team there, while a return match will be staged at the Oaklands Monday.

Mrs. R. J. Stokes has a six-point lead in the 72-hole medal play handicap tourney at the Trenton club and indications are that she will win the event, as it ends with the final 18 holes next Tuesday.

Results of the match yesterday, with Trenton players named first: Mrs. M. J. Scammell halved with Miss Helen O'Connor; Mrs. R. J. Stokes, 2; Mrs. Freda Griffin, 1; Miss Doris Taylor, 1; Mrs. Arthur Hagar, 1. Mrs. Theodore Tobish, 0; Mrs. Hedley White, 2; Mrs. Charles Stuckert, 0; Miss Helen Hines, 3; Mrs. Rufus Matthews, 2; Mrs. A. H. Greywacz, 1; Mrs. Richard Montgomery, 0; Miss Gertrude Perkins, 3. Mrs. David S. Hill, 2; Miss Josephine Walsh, 1. Mrs. Mitchell Reese, 0; Mrs. J. Bentley

Candy, Jr., 3. Miss Rhoda Jackson, 0; Mrs. Arthur Ruzhie, 2. Miss Helen O'Connor won the prize for the low score of the visiting team.

One Hurt, Three Overcome In Blaze at Burlington

BURLINGTON, N. J., Aug. 20.—One man was injured and three others were overcome by smoke in fighting a fire that gutted the homes of Joseph Devlin and Charles Taggart, on the Fountain Woods Road, Springside, about a mile from here, yesterday afternoon.

Walter Vile, of Springside, a member of the Independence Fire Company, sustained a severe scalp wound when he was struck by a falling hose nozzle. The three overcome were members of the same company.

The fire broke out in the upper story of the Devlin home and spread to the adjoining house. Both roofs were badly burned and much damage was done to the furniture in the houses by the tons of water that were pumped on the fire before it was extinguished.
